Privileged Instructions

Fundamental Principles

- The core purpose of the summit is to address long-standing disagreements over border demarcations and water rights, primarily between Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, and Uzbekistan, but with implications for Turkmenistan. Keeping these nations off balance and focused inward on their closest neighbors is a valuable position for us. The delegation is directed to ensure no meaningful outcome is achieved regarding a comprehensive settlement of these disputes from the perspective of the Central Asian nations. It is a Red Line if these nations achieve a comprehensive agreement resolving their border and resource management conflicts.
- India must not be allowed to gain a foothold as a leader in Central Asia. All negotiation positions taken that might allow India to achieve any such outcome must be stopped. The delegation is directed to offer incentives to the Central Asian nations attending the summit, as well as use coercive means, but seek approval from the Foreign Minister before delivering direct warnings or implying coercive actions to achieve this objective.
- Russia is a spent power, despite attempts to reestablish their empire. Gone are the days of Imperial Russia, but that does not stop the inherent Russian belief they should dominate what they call their "near abroad". The delegation is directed to prevent Russia from reinserting their military power in the region, especially in Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan. Russian forces sent to these regions to influence the internal politics of either nation is a Red Line for us. The delegation may use whatever means they choose to interfere with any such plans. We will not countenance Moscow's attempts to meddle in our affairs, including the establishment of PLA bases in cooperation with the Central Asian nations.
- Finally, we need water resources for our western provinces. Part of the summit's goals include achieving a breakthrough on an agreement around the protection and shared use of water resources between Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan, and potentially Turkmenistan. Climate science indicates greater instability in the water cycle for Central Asia. However, an agreed-to outcome on water sharing among these nations that excludes water imports into our western provinces is a Red Line. The delegation must find ways to prevent this outcome. Offering incentives in the areas of political support, economic development or assistance, or security assistance and arms sales in exchange for not signing off on water agreements is authorized.

Principle Negotiation Positions

These positions are to be presented openly and publicly to all attendees. However, the delegation should pursue the specific items outlined below, either bilaterally or multilaterally, and should ensure the our red lines are not crossed in any diplomatic agreements that might be presented, discussed, or aggressively pursued.

- We support a peaceful resolution to the two key issues that have brought these eight nations together to convene this summit—border disputes and water resources.
- We will assist any nation in the region with technical expertise, construction projects, or other means to achieve the desired outcome of shared use of water resources, with the hope that a comprehensive agreement might also deliver more water to our population and economic development in our western provinces. Smart water use across the region means shared health and wellbeing, economic benefits, and the establishment of trust among people on our continent.
- The Belt and Road Initiative continues to deliver affordable infrastructure improvements for all participants and we hope to find new projects and expand on previous agreements to continue to grow the economies of the Central Asian nations.

These positions are to be held throughout the summit but are not to be presented openly to any other delegation unless otherwise directed.

- A focus for the summit is to address the borders between Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, and Uzbekistan. We insist the borders remain as they are today. Altering the borders is a Red Line for us and should be opposed with vigor, but without embarrassing the Central Asian nations through word or deed in undermining any move toward border demarcation changes. There is the possibility that some sort of monitoring mission might be proposed for the Fergana Valley. We are not opposed to such a mission as long as neither Russia nor India serves as a primary leader of that mission. Instead, a disinterested third-party nation might take the lead, but we will exercise our responsibilities inside the UN Security Council to ensure a nation acceptable to China is granted leadership of such a mission.
- India's presence at the summit is a result of Tajikistan's invitation. We are opposed to India's participation in this summit and Tajikistan should be influenced to abandon partnerships with India. Should the delegation find Tajikistan seeking to expand their relationship with India, the delegation should contact the Foreign Minister immediately with all available details around the talks. Enhancing or expanding India's influence in Central Asia is a Red Line. No other nations can know about this stance; comport yourselves accordingly.
- Finally, the CSTO is a dead organization, even if the Russian Federation doesn't yet understand that reality. Should the CSTO be raised as the appropriate mechanism to provide security for any border agreement or water resources sharing agreement, the Chinese delegation is to ensure such an outcome is torpedoed expeditiously. Seek specific guidance from the Foreign Minister if you discover such plans in motion.

Delegation Instructions

Ensure periodic reports, requests for further guidance, or clarifications to the instructions herein are submitted to the office of the Foreign Minister.

General: The delegation will work closely with and support the UN Special Representative of the Secretary-General's efforts to mediate this crisis. The delegation is directed to collect all available information about the negotiating positions of the other countries at the summit. Where possible, ascertain the other nation's flexible areas and try to bend the countries toward agreeing to Chinese interests. The end goal of this summit is for the People's Republic of China to establish greater regional influence, to reduce tensions among our Central Asian neighbors, and to set conditions allowing for subsequent bilateral engagement between the Foreign Ministry and the Central Asian nations to further our interests throughout Central Asia.

RUSSIA

Russia has become a useful nation to our long-term strategic goals in Central Asia and more broadly around the world. The Russian Federation is a rapidly weakening power due to adventurism in Ukraine and sanctions placed on Russia since February of 2022. Nevertheless, Russia's massive nuclear arsenal and willingness to tie down much of the United States's resources is functionally useful to our grand strategy. The delegation is directed to be openly supportive of Russia's positions in multilateral negotiations but may be more circumspect about Russia's ability to deliver on any promises, be they economic, security, or other when the delegation is engaged in bilateral talks with the other attendees. Russia continues to believe they have dominance in what they call their "near abroad," but this is a fiction, and the Central Asian nations are now charting their own course. Russia must learn to control their tendencies toward imperialism. Should you discover that Russia has designs on reinvigorating their role in the region you should subtly communicate to them the reality of their position. Be particularly mindful of Russian efforts to insert themselves in Kyrgyzstan or Tajikistan. Additionally, the delegation is directed to remind the Russian delegation they have not yet delivered on their promise to transfer Russian land along the Tumen River to afford Chinese shipping direct access to the Sea of Japan. Russia's embrace of North Korea, one of our vassal states, is also of concern, but transfer of this land would mollify our concerns.

INDIA

India is our major adversary on the Asian continent. Most of India's military force exists to contain or challenge us and India has courted defense partnerships with the United States, Japan, Australia, and others. India's efforts to insert themselves into Central Asia are to be continually opposed. The delegation is directed to be openly hostile toward India's delegation, to include application of Wolf Warrior Diplomacy; meaning the delegation should not hesitate to heckle any Indian diplomatic offers to any nation at the summit. India must not be allowed to reinsert themselves into Tajikistan, and cajoling the Tajik delegation, while not ideal, should be used if positive, incentive-based approaches do not have the desired effect. Splitting India and Tajikistan's renewed relationship is a goal at this summit, though not the primary goal. Nevertheless, if the delegation sees a means to create a rift between India and Tajikistan, or between India and Russia, another long-term partner to India, the delegation should execute such measures. Isolate India at every turn.

KAZAKHSTAN

Kazakhstan is vitally important to us. Kazakh oil, natural gas, metals, minerals, and water resources inside Kazakhstan are all part of our long-term economic plan, and importing these commodities from Kazakhstan is the most expedient way to acquire these resources for the western provinces. Kazakhstan is to be courted in every way. Whatever the delegation can do to dramatically improve the relationship between us and Kazakhstan is authorized, including openly backing their ideas for settled border resolutions and sharing of water resources in Central Asia. While openly supporting the Kazakh positions, it is vital for the delegation to ensure the border dispute isn't completely settled, and even better if the Kazakh delegation believes the positions held by Kyrgyzstan, Tajikistan, and Uzbekistan, particularly on water resource management, are somehow not genuine. Regarding security arrangements, for now Kazakhstan remains part of the Russian-led CSTO. It is becoming clear that Kazakhstan's security situation remains stable, and could be improved with our assistance, particularly in cyber security and technological innovations to improve security systems designed to spot threats to Kazakh internal interests. The delegation is directed to seek an agreement with the Kazakh delegation regarding significantly enhancing Kazakhstan's security apparatus. To further develop this security partnership, the delegation is to offer the idea of crafting an intelligence sharing arrangement with Kazakh intelligence services and both the Ministry of State Security and PLA intelligence services. Finally, Kazakhstan is in a unique position to encourage Uzbekistan to export natural resources through Kazakhstan to our western provinces. If there is an opening to insert these ideas, the delegation should seek to facilitate any development wherein Uzbekistan partners with Kazakhstan to deliver natural resources to us.

KYRGYZSTAN

Kyrgyzstan shares a border with us, and we have, for too long, simply allowed that obvious partnership to remain in its infancy. This summit is the right time for our delegation to aggressively seek ways to partner with the Kyrgyz Republic in all areas, to include enhancing political stability, improving Kyrgyz security, and certainly in expanding the economy of Kyrgyzstan. The delegation is authorized to work closely with the Tajik delegation in bilateral-only discussions regarding these points. The delegation should not openly discuss mechanisms designed to embrace the Kyrgyz Republic and to bring them into our orbit. Rather, ensure this initiative is publicly downplayed while aggressively pursuing it in bilateral talks. We are particularly prepared to sell the Kyrgyz Republic new military equipment, or exchange PLA equipment for access to Kyrgyz oil, natural gas, metals, or minerals. It should be emphasized that only the most stringent environmental protections will be used to assist the Kyrgyz people in extracting their natural resources, and getting them to market, thereby expanding economic opportunity for all people inside the Kyrgyz Republic. Finally, the Kyrgyz people deserve security, and it's become clear the CSTO is nearly defunct. Should the Kyrgyz Republic wish to explore a more robust security relationship with us, the delegation is directed to acquire the core elements of what such an agreement might look like for Kyrgyzstan, and to send that information to the Foreign Ministry for consideration and follow-on talks. Make no formal agreements on these points. Instead, encourage an in-depth discussion regarding how the Kyrgyz delegation sees such an arrangement, then transmit that information to the Foreign Ministry.

TAJIKISTAN

Tajikistan is a weak nation economically, militarily, and even politically. The people do not trust their government, and Tajik militants have filtered out from Tajikistan into neighboring nations to support Salafist Jihadi ideologies and terrorist movements. We, sharing a lengthy border with Tajikistan, can offer both economic and security assistance, at scale, to address Tajik security and economic woes. The delegation is authorized to seek specific points of agreement with the Tajik delegation in these two areas and measures beneficial to Tajikistan's future in this regard may be used to undermine Tajikistan's agreements with the other Central Asian nations. Ensure the Tajik delegation understands that to receive our assistance to a degree that would make a significant difference to the nation, they should not sacrifice their sovereignty over their water resources, or their borders. Expanding Chinese assistance to include mining extraction and processing, agricultural assistance, and even water storage and conservation are all available to the Tajiks if they align with us over India or Russia. Additional opportunities to effect Belt and Road Initiative expansion inside Tajikistan should also be sought.

UZBEKISTAN

Uzbekistan has, for some years now, been receptive to economic ties with us. These ties should be fostered at this summit and enhanced and expanded wherever possible. Uzbekistan is also on a path toward political liberalism, which is a recipe for disaster in the region. Thus, while enhancing the economic relationship, the delegation should seek to sow mistrust between the Uzbek delegation and the other delegations. Uzbekistan needs updated military equipment. This brings an opportunity to us to export high quality arms, and to provide training and assistance to the Uzbek military, allowing us to influence the civil/military relationship inside the Uzbek government. The delegation should prioritize the effort to sell arms to Uzbekistan at a very reasonable price, but such a deal must include Chinese technical experts on the ground inside Uzbekistan to facilitate comprehensive training on Chinese-made systems. If the Uzbek delegation is interested in intelligence sharing agreements with the PLA intelligence services, of the Ministry of State Security, that, too, is a viable partnership, but such a thing should only be discussed in bilateral sessions, and, ideally, only between the heads of delegation. No final agreement may be signed at the summit on any security matter. Instead, the framework might be outlined, but then must be passed on to the respective foreign ministries for detailed coordination. Finally, Uzbekistan's borders are the most complex. Highlight for the Uzbek delegation the fact that the PLA is, by far, the stronger force in the region, and it would be ideal for Uzbekistan to have us in their corner, supporting their territorial sovereignty. The delegation should be privately supportive of Uzbekistan's border claims but should take no public positions in any multilateral discussions.

There may be times when the Foreign Minister is unable to respond immediately to your communication. Under those circumstances, the delegation should proceed as directed in this guidance.
