Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the People's Republic of China

Privileged Instructions

Fundamental Principles:

- Chinese national sovereignty encompasses claims in the Himalayan region, specifically Aksai Chin, Arunachal Pradesh, and the Shaksam Valley in Gilgit-Baltistan.
- Any resolution must preserve access to economic opportunities via the Arabian Sea.
- Chinese regional influence demonstrates its international prestige.

Desired End State(s):

- Alleviation of current tensions between Pakistan and India.
- Increased security and stabilization in the region.
- Preservation of the status quo in Jammu and Kashmir.

Delegation Instructions

Ensure periodic reports, requests for further guidance, or clarifications to the instructions herein are submitted via message to the office of the Foreign Minister.

PRIMARY GUIDANCE:

Though you are trained in Zhànláng Wàijiāo (Wolf Warrior Diplomacy) you must balance this style with that of a more measured approach. Utilize President Xi's dàguó-wàijiāo (Major Country Diplomacy) by taking a more active role in these discussions. Per President Xi's thoughts on diplomacy: "adhere to the correct role view, emphasize the analysis of the international situation and put yourself in it, and make it clear that China has become the main driving force behind the evolution of the world pattern, and the times and trends are on our side."

We prefer to work bilaterally with nations. Through this, we can better concentrate our discussion(s) and find agreement. Minimize multi-lateral discussions as this diminishes our strength and may sway discussion away from our concerns. This does not mean that you cannot attend multi-lateral discussions, but it is preferred that you try your best to work bilaterally.

As I stated in previously, "the so-called 'wolf warrior diplomacy' is a discourse trap. Those who create the discourse trap either do not understand China or Chinese diplomacy or ignore the facts and have ulterior motives." Never forget that our diplomacy "has enough kindness and goodwill, but when wolves stand in the way and evil wolves come, Chinese diplomats must 'dance with wolves' to defend their home and country."

Seek to maintain security in the region through the stabilization of the current conflict in Jammu and Kashmir. Play a neutral role on issues involving Kashmiri governance and territorial issues. A resolution of the Kashmiri governance question will ultimately change the calculation of our strategic interests in the region. A demilitarized Jammu and Kashmir would likely increase Indian mobilization to the Sino-Indian border. Therefore, while we have provided Pakistan with military support, maintaining a neutral stance on the issue of Kashmiri independence will preserve the status quo and avoid confrontation with India.

Keep in mind it may be beneficial to seek common ground with Russia to counterbalance and marginalize the position of the United States. You may not meet with the Jammu and Kashmir delegation bilaterally; however, you may engage in multilateral negotiations in which the Jammu & Kashmir delegation is a participant.

The British and American governments have intimated that they plan on raising the issue of the Pakistani and Indian nuclear weapons programs during these talks. If so, our position is one of relative neutrality as long as both nations continue to demonstrate that their programs are genuine deterrents that effectively prevent warfare. We have seen that they have, as they constrained India from attacking Pakistan during the 1986-87 Brass-tacks Crisis, the 1990 Compound Crisis, and the Mumbai terrorist attack of 2008. Both nations have the right of self-defense and they both understand that nuclear weapons are tools of restraint rather than tools of warfare and conquest. Our government has been supportive of Pakistan's efforts to build a viable nuclear deterrent to an aggressive Indian nation, and we will continue to provide that support.

Chapter Issues and Principal Negotiating Positions

Chapter I: Territory

Discussion:

Territorial issues within Jammu and Kashmir have come to define the conflict. Since Indian Partition in 1947, competing claims in the region sparked several wars between India and Pakistan and between our nation and India. The terrain is among the most difficult in the world, which has made the demarcation of a true border nearly impossible. While the Himalayas serve as a natural border between China and India, effective governance of this area remains difficult. The Line of Control (LoC) that was agreed upon between India and Pakistan in 1949 has served as a de facto border, effectively splitting the Kashmiri state into two parts. Indian-held Kashmir contains the fertile and densely populated Kashmir Valley. Pakistani-held Azad Kashmir is less populated and agrarian. We have claimed areas within Gilgit-Baltistan (specifically, the Shaksam Valley), which shares a border with Azad Kashmir and is also partially claimed by Pakistan. India continues to challenge our claim of Aksai Chin in the eastern area of Jammu and Kashmir.

Our Position:

Territorial integrity is central to our negotiation strategy. While we hope to uphold the LoC between Pakistan and India, its legality has raised issues concerning the McMahon Line of 1913, which demarcated British India's borders with China. While India maintains the sanctity of this line, it was nevertheless arbitrarily demarcated by the British Empire and holds no legal or technical legitimacy by which to delineate our border with India. Overall, Chinese national sovereignty undoubtedly encompasses our historical claims of Aksai Chin, Arunachal Pradesh, and the Shaksam Valley in Gilgit-Baltistan.

Guidance:

We must uphold the sovereignty of our territory. Prioritizing the legitimacy of our territorial claims is paramount to sustaining our regional influence. Remain committed to the status quo of our territorial claims, and seek to ensure the continued division of Jammu and Kashmir between Pakistan and India along the LoC. We have no interest in souring relations with Pakistan by forwarding additional claims on the Shaksam Valley in Gilgit-Baltistan, which is currently administered by Islamabad but crucial to Sino-Pakistani trade routes. Further, we must maintain claims on Aksai Chin, where we have built the only all-weather highway between Tibet and Xinxiang. Any concessions on Aksai Chin would set a dangerous precedent that Tibetan separatists could exploit.

Red Lines:

- No independent Jammu and Kashmir.
 - No consolidated Indian or Pakistani claim on the entirety of Jammu and Kashmir.
 - No agreement in which our nation forfeits territorial claims.
 - No change in the security status (the current stationing of Chinese forces) in Aksai Chin.

Chapter II: Jammu and Kashmir Governance

Discussion:

Indian-occupied Jammu and Kashmir has effectively been ruled as a military garrison state since the Partition of 1947, which has exacerbated a variety of governance concerns. Approximately 95 percent of the Kashmir Valley is populated by citizens who identify as Muslim and have stronger ties to Pakistan than to Hindu-dominated India. Thus, many Kashmiris prefer separation from India or movement towards autonomy or independence. The Jammu & Kashmiri leadership claims to represent this diverse population and has declared for an unprecedented level of autonomy for all of the old princely state Jammu and Kashmir, which also encompasses areas claimed or already ceded to our nation. The local government maintains control over Kashmir Valley in the Indian-controlled sector, and the Jammu & Kashmiri leadership is promoting its consolidation of influence over both sides of the LoC. India's oppressive control over Indian Jammu and Kashmir helped create the atmosphere that has allowed the Jammu & Kashmiri leadership to emerge as a major separatist movement.

Our Position:

We have a vested interest in the stability of Jammu and Kashmir. While the territorial claims by all parties have not been resolved, we envision a solution that preserves the existing demarcation about the LoC. We view our claims on the Shaksam Valley in Gilgit-Baltistan and Aksai Chin as historical and legitimate and will not offer concessions on this matter. Pakistan's continued control over Azad Kashmir will support our current economic preferences through access to the Arabian Sea via the Gwadar Port.

We have historically seen the issue of governance in Jammu and Kashmir as a struggle between Pakistan and India. While we must continue to remain publicly neutral on this issue, we must also act to ensure our territorial claims, which continue to be challenged. An autonomous or independent Jammu and Kashmir, as legitimized entity, separate from both Pakistan, but especially India, would upend the geopolitical balance in the region and therefore threaten our territorial claims. Supporting the use of the LoC as the international border will ensure that the conflict over territory remains between India and Pakistan. Weaken any support for Jammu & Kashmir delegation's objectives from within any of the participating delegations.

Guidance:

We should commit to maintaining the current status quo of governance in Jammu and Kashmir. In the present negotiations, we should be willing to talk to all parties except the Jammu & Kashmir delegation, because recognizing separatist movements might inspire similar movements within our territories. Our negotiation strategy should limit the possibility of a plebiscite on the independence of Jammu and Kashmir. We will not support the possibility of a Jammu & Kashmiri leadership-led autonomous or independent Jammu and Kashmir, nor do we prefer any change to our current claims, or the claims of Pakistan and India.

Red Lines:

- No plebiscite allowing a vote on an autonomous or independent Jammu and Kashmir.
- No autonomous entity or independent nation of Jammu and Kashmir.

Chapter III: Human Rights and Displaced Persons

Discussion:

Human rights issues and the displacement of large sectors of the population remain a source of contention. Continued military actions and human rights violations have increased international support for human rights investigations in the region. Pakistan has called for an international human rights investigation within Indian-administered Jammu and Kashmir. In addition to the call for international investigations, hundreds of thousands of internally displaced persons (IDPs) and refugees continue to be displaced from Jammu and Kashmir in India and Pakistan. Concerns remain that insurgent elements may be mixed in with IDPs with the intent to further exacerbate this tenuous situation.

Our Position:

With humanitarian aid issues already addressed in previous meetings, the current negotiations seek to resolve two issues related to human rights: human rights investigations, and IDP and refugee issues. We must ensure that any agreement adequately recognizes the sovereign rights of interested parties in the region.

Human Rights Investigations: We respect the internal policies of each sovereign nation involved in negotiations. In the same manner, we expect the international community to respect our sovereignty over our human rights, which is fundamentally a domestic issue. We must oppose any international investigations in order to avoid setting a dangerous precedent in our sphere of influence. India and Pakistan should resolve their current accusations through an internal review, without the involvement of the United Nations, extra-regional parties, or other negotiating states.

IDP and Refugee Issues: As a confidence-building measure, we will offer to provide monetary relief aid for the roughly 950,000 IDPs and refugee which have fled from Jammu and Kashmir. The exact figure can be negotiated later so long as the concept is accepted.

Guidance:

Encourage Pakistan and India to solve their human rights disputes through internal reviews. Human rights investigations are an issue where the Chinese government diverges from Pakistan. Investigations in the region will only increase concerns about human rights in China, and we cannot support Pakistan on this matter. Work with Russia in opposing international investigations of this sort, as they should ally on this topic. Limit possible demands for international investigations, we should focus on immediate and tangible concerns, such as humanitarian aid to refugees and IDPs.

Pakistan remains an ally on refugee/IDP and humanitarian aid issues. Offer to provide a financial contribution to relief efforts as a confidence-building measure. A substantial financial offer will assure Pakistan of our friendship and will increase their support on territorial issues. We remain committed to preventing the further growth of insurgency groups and are eager to maintain the support of Pakistan and Russia in preventing the misappropriation of humanitarian aid.

Red Line:

No international human rights investigations in the region.
