Privileged Instructions

Fundamental Principles

- Establishment of peace and stability on the Korean Peninsula.
- Current alliances, defense measures and mechanisms held by our nation, the United States and South Korea must be sustained.

Desired End States

- Complete and verifiable denuclearization of North Korea.
- A complete admission and resolution of the DPRK's kidnapping and detainment of Japanese citizens.
- A complete end to all North Korean proliferation activities and actions, specifically as regards all aspects of nuclear, chemical, biological, and ballistic missile technologies, expertise and components.
- DPRK military reduced to levels commensurate with normal non-nuclear, self-defense.
- A North Korean state that recognizes and operates in complete compliance with all international norms.
- A North Korean state that can be trusted to adhere to both the spirit and substance of all agreements entered.
- The establishment of a peace agreement between the United States, South Korea and North Korea to end the Korean War.

Principle Negotiation Positions

- Pyongyang has proven time after time to be a completely unreliable negotiating partner; therefore, confidence-building must be an essential first step to renewed talks.
- While we initially advocate a return to the basic tenets of the 2005 Joint Resolution as a foundation for further negotiations. We cannot be tied to a failed attempt if there is no immediate, substantial, and sustainable progress. There must be flexibility to re-characterize these negotiations as new issues arise.
- North Korea must negotiate in good faith and ensure its positions, all compromises or adjustments to those positions, and all agreements entered are fully supported by all sectors of its government, especially by the military, and fully implemented.
- North Korea must cease all acts of military brinkmanship. These will not be tolerated, and any such acts will cause our nation to suspend its support of and participation in this or any other diplomatic process.

NOTIONAL EXERCISE MATERIAL FOR EDUCATIONAL PURPOSES ONLY

- THAAD and the conduct of JP-ROK-U.S. military exercises must be sustained if the North's nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programs remain in place.
- While the normalization of Japan-DPRK relations is a desired outcome, there can be no action to move forward on this issue until all other issues have been addressed and resolved.
- There will be no assistance, humanitarian or any other, provided to Pyongyang until its government has agreed to, and implements, a comprehensive package agreement covering all issues identified in these talks. This includes an internationally monitored shutdown and disablement of its nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programs.
- All existing sanctions must remain in place and be relieved only under the tenets of a final comprehensive agreement.
- At an appropriate time, Pyongyang, Seoul and Washington should look to start separate negotiations on a peace treaty to formally end the Korean War.

Red Flags

- Any agreement that does not take into consideration a full accounting of the DPRK abduction of Japanese citizens.
- Any lessening of sanctions on North Korea in the absence of a comprehensive agreement ending its nuclear and ballistic missile programs.

Delegation Instructions

Ensure periodic reports, requests for further guidance, or clarifications to the instructions herein are submitted via message to the office of the Foreign Minister.

While we seek a stable Korean peninsula and a stable, prosperous and responsible North Korean nation that works in harmony with the world family of nations, we do not believe that the DPRK requires, or should be in possession of, a nuclear weapons or offensive ballistic missile capability. We will work with our U.S. and ROK partners to ensure that these capabilities are terminated in a peaceful manner under a negotiated agreement, and as part of a larger, comprehensive agreement with North Korea. If these negotiations fail, with the DPRK's nuclear and missile programs left unaffected and unconstrained, then we will be forced to begin the development of its own nuclear and missile programs to ensure our nation's self-defense. Emphasize at every turn that no other nation, save for South Korea, faces a more serious threat from North Korea missiles, whether nuclear or conventional, than does ours, especially given the stationing of U.S. forces within our nation.

Not only must the North's nuclear weapon and ballistic missile programs be disabled and terminated, but the nonproliferation of nuclear and chemical weapons must be inextricably tied to any agreement. A resultant monitoring and inspection processes must be relentlessly imposed and implemented. If the proliferation risk is not adequately addressed, and agreements thereon implemented and enforced, it is likely that the North will continue to sell materials, and knowledge, to others looking to build their own weapons capabilities to threaten other nations. None of this can be allowed to continue.

We are not opposed to providing Light Water Power Reactors (LWRs) to North Korea within the tenets of an overarching agreement. If this is done, then it must be accomplished through the reestablishment of an extensively re-envisioned Korean Energy Development Organization (KEDO). Only after an irreversible dismantlement of the North's nuclear programs has been achieved, and the DPRK has returned to the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty (NPT) as a member in good standing and has rejoined the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) can this be done. The old KEDO agreement allowed the DPRK to manage and operate the LWRs. Any new KEDO agreement must remove the DPRK from any involvement in any part of the LWRs. Instead, they would be installed and operated by the KEDO Corporation itself. Failing that, our nation calls on the DPRK to partner with China and Russia on non-nuclear power projects to provide needed electrical supplies through conventional upgrades and improvements to its electrical power infrastructure and distribution grid. Bottom Line: The DPRK must never be allowed to possess or operate a nuclear capability of any kind.

Any bilateral agreement reached with the DPRK must include a satisfactory accounting of all their actions regarding the abduction of Japanese citizens, to include the identification and recovery of the remains of all those who died in North Korea. While both South Korea and the United States do not share the deep animus our nation feels regarding the abduction of our citizens, seek to move them toward our view. For the sake of all Japanese citizens affected, internationalize this issue to bring maximum pressure on the DPRK to adequately address and resolve it. However, this issue alone should not be allowed to compromise our joint positions to abolish the DPRK's nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programs.

Maintain our joint positions, with the United States and South Korean delegations, on the need for a comprehensive agreement covering all the issues cited in the Chairman's Framework for the Six-Party Talks, and not a step-by-step agreement, as advocated by China and Russia. A step-by-step agreement, as proposed by Beijing, would both reward the North in the short term and allow Pyongyang to drag out negotiations while it continues to work on its nuclear and missile capabilities. There would be no guarantee that an agreement to dismantle its nuclear and missile programs would ever be reached and implemented.

An additional set of issues, not currently outlined in the Chairman's Framework, but that Washington wishes to pursue, is to end the North's chemical and cyber warfare capabilities. Unlike the nuclear and missile programs, where testing and capability demonstrations are as they have taken those programs, Pyongyang has supplied chemical weapons, or their components, to countries that have used them against their own people (Syria), and even used VX nerve agent to assassinate Kim Jong-un's half-brother. Over the past several years, Pyongyang has employed its offense cyber capabilities to attack vulnerable targets around the world. Therefore, these additional threats need to be addressed. In our own private consultations with Seoul, we must both agree that the U.S. delegation cannot adamantly pursue these new issues that doing so might cause these talks to fail.

We take no position of our own on China's 'mutual freeze' proposal, but rather will support the U.S. and South Korean positions. Washington and Seoul both see a freeze of the North's nuclear program as potentially unverifiable and it would only serve to lock in the capabilities that Pyongyang has, while doing nothing to lessen the threat. Freezing, or in essence, cancelling JP-U.S.-ROK training and exercises, for an undetermined period, will substantially degrade necessary military preparation, coordination, and readiness essential for the defense of South Korea. A freeze will not be the neutral event Beijing claims, but one that would work in favor of the DPRK.

North Korea must rein in its military and cease any, and all, provocative acts. These acts are used to sabotage and destroy confidence-building efforts that are essential to these talks by not allowing them to continue and progress. With regards confidence-building, we should propose that delegates from Seoul and Pyongyang resume their once promising North-South dialogue, either within these talks or separately, without preconditions. This will rebuild trust between the two nations, and by extension within the region, internationally, and especially within these talks.

Lastly, but most fundamentally, in both Washington's and Seoul's haste to achieve an agreement we must not let our nation be sidelined or be left behind. Our nation is as close to North Korea as any nation with which it does not share a land border. What happens on the Korean peninsula will always have a great impact our nation. Therefore, we must always be in the forefront of any, and all, talks and the determination of agreements regarding North Korea. Ensure that the representatives from Washington and Seoul, as well as those representing Beijing and Moscow, understand and honor the important and vital role our nation can and must play in these and any further talks.
